AT&T Yellow Pages

NEWS March 8, 2006

Planned BellSouth acquisition would bring together two strong directory companies

The planned acquisition of BellSouth by AT&T will merge two solid, well-run companies with complementary strengths to create a more efficient, effective and capable provider of wireless, video, broadband, data, telephone and directory services.

Both companies have large and successful directory businesses. Following successful integration, the combined directory businesses owned by AT&T would be larger and more capable of achieving advantages of scale and scope with their operations. And that would ultimately be better for both customers and employees.

BellSouth's region for print directories includes Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Tennessee. The company publishes about 500 directory titles. AT&T Yellow Pages publishes more than 700 titles in 13 states. Combined, the businesses would be responsible for publishing about 1,200 titles in 22 states.

Our directory companies have a proven ability to work well together as seen by our Internet Yellow Pages joint venture, YELLOWPAGES.COM, said Dennis Payne, CEO of AT&T Yellow Pages. Together, we quickly and successfully built that operation to become the No. 1 Internet Yellow Pages network in the country. Our companies have a lot in common and this merger is a logical step in the industry's development.

The announced merger is subject to regulatory and legal approvals, but AT&T is optimistic that the merger approvals could be obtained and the deal closed within about 12 months. Following merger approvals, the new AT&T Yellow Pages businesses will have larger scale that enables efficiencies. Other key benefits will include developing sales, marketing and operational best practices based on each company's experience and strengths. The result will be more effective businesses with a goal of serving customers better than ever across a broader footprint, Payne said.

Integration planning for the merger of the directory companies will be mainly a headquarters function, so it should not distract field operations. For all of us at AT&T Yellow Pages, the most important thing to do now is stay focused on flawless execution and on serving our customers and meeting our objectives for 2006, Payne said. Payne also urged employees to avoid speculating about possible changes as a result of the merger activities, and to avoid discussions with counterparts in BellSouth Advertising and Publishing. Our companies are separate entities and cannot share information outside of the controlled merger processes.
