Versum Team,

On behalf of my fellow colleagues at Entegris, I am writing to share with you how excited we are to join forces with Versum Materials. We believe the merger between Entegris and Versum Materials will create a company better equipped to help our customers solve their most complex manufacturing process challenges, faster and more efficiently than ever before. Together, we will be able to offer our customers unique insight gained from a highly diversified solutions portfolio, greater access to industry expertise across a wider global presence, more state-of-the-art labs and capabilities, and an unmatched commitment to ongoing innovation funded by a partner with sound financial stability.

As you know, semiconductor demand is accelerating driven by radical technologies of The Fourth Industrial Revolution, such as artificial intelligence, IoT, VR, and cloud computing. The compute power needed to fuel these applications relies on higher performance advanced logic and memory chips in much greater quantities. Entegris operates at the intersection of materials and purity this is the right time and the right area for us to grow our business and we believe Versum is the right partner. To say I am confident that this combination will create great opportunities for our companies, our employees, and our customers is an understatement.

One thing you may not know about Entegris is that we have a long, rich history of merger success. In fact, I joined Entegris in 2005 as part of the merger with Mykrolis, which in an interesting parallel had been spun out of Millipore just five years earlier. This is not a unique story at Entegris, there are many employees from Mykrolis, POCO Graphite, and ATMI including half of our executive team, who after coming to Entegris through M&A activities have grown successful careers. It is important for you to understand this is a merger predicated on growth, and I am exhilarated by the prospect of what our employees can accomplish together.

A critical factor to our continued success is you. Your innovative thinking, strong execution, and relentless focus on customer success has positioned Versum as a cutting-edge specialty materials supplier. We will rely on you to continue providing customers with the same outstanding service and high-quality products and solutions that they have come to expect.

Successfully bringing our two companies together will require a thoughtful integration plan. To help facilitate this effort, we are creating an Integration Planning Office consisting of individuals from both companies. We will be communicating more about that team and their plan soon. In the coming days, I will be hosting a global town hall meeting from the Tempe office on February 11th to tell you more about Entegris, and I look forward to meeting and speaking with as many of you as possible.

Until then, let me reiterate the admiration of the collective Entegris team and thank you in advance for your patience and continued focus on customer success as we move toward merging our two great companies.

Sincerely,

Bertrand Loy

President and Chief Executive Officer, Entegris
