FOR IMMEDIATE PUBLICATION

FirstAssist and CGI sign a 10-year, £multi-million

GIOS contract

London, UK November 10, 2003 CGI Group (Europe) Limited (CGI) (TSX: GIB.A; NYSE: GIB) has signed a 10-year, £multi-million contract to implement its leading insurance administration system, GIOS (Global Insurance Open Solution), with FirstAssist, a major player within the healthcare and assistance markets.

FirstAssist, formerly the healthcare division of RSA, relies on disparate legacy applications, which are difficult to maintain and manage effectively. The company decided it required a more technologically advanced insurance system, which would help drive down administration costs across the organisation and provide it with the ability to offer exceptional customer service. Following a thorough evaluation of all the leading solutions available on the market, FirstAssist chose CGI's revolutionary insurance administration system, GIOS.

GIOS is a highly flexible, modular solution, which is capable of fully supporting the administration function for all forms of insurance products. Through the use of CGI's GIOS Healthcare template as a starting point, FirstAssist gains access to the specialist healthcare insurance functionality that is readily available within GIOS.

FirstAssist has already begun working with CGI in the design phase of the implementation and, following extensive testing, is scheduled to go-live in the UK in October 2004.

Steve Wood, managing director of FirstAssist, comments: CGI will help FirstAssist benefit from having one of the most functionality rich solutions available on the market. GIOS will enable us to have a completely integrated system and the benefits in terms of time and cost savings will be immense.

Wood adds: GIOS will also be integrated into VEDA, the leading-edge Internet-based billing and coding technology from Healthcode. This will enable FirstAssist to monitor invoicing procedures and working practices more effectively, and we are working closely with CGI in pioneering this important insurance industry standard for billing and coding.

Gavin Chapman, managing director at CGI Group Europe, said: Healthcare insurance organisations must streamline their operations if they are to remain cost effective and consistent in meeting the industry's increasing business volumes. Currently, many insurers have a large number of disparate legacy IT systems, none of which communicate with each other very well, if at all. FirstAssist's new single operational platform will provide real flexibility for the company's future expansion and result in superior customer service and real competitive edge.

Chapman adds: CGI will work closely with FirstAssist to produce an intuitive solution, tailored to the organisation's specific needs. We look forward to building this successful relationship in the years to come.
